

February 8, 1983

LB 34

we were loading cattle a bunch of deer came through and jumped the fence. One of them broke its neck and dropped dead, and my first reaction was to load it up and get somebody, permission to slaughter the animal because it was killed and it was perfectly good deer. And then one of the guys reminded me if I did that, I would get X hundred dollar fine just going to...asking what to do, and maybe that is an isolated incident that ought not be worried about, but was there any possibility that there could be other instances other than motor vehicle hitting a deer that salvage of the meat would be appropriate?